After untiring, long-continued endeavor, he was successful in eliminating many dangers from these factors. In 1902, he became president of the American Society for Testing Materials. In 1909 the International Congress elected him president for the following period. He entered upon the duties of his new office with all the enthusiasm of a young man. He even began diligently to perfect his knowledge of languages in order personally to put the trilingual form of the association to good account. The hopes, however, that were bound up with Dr. Dudley's new sphere of action, were unhappily soon destroyed by a short and sudden illness, which unexpectedly put a premature end to his indefatigable life on the 21st of December, 1909. The testing engineer and the comparatively modern science of testing owes much to Dr. Dudley. His was a life well spent in the service...
